From the Rope which Reached Earth to the Grave—The Disposi-tion of the Assassin Guitean's Hody—The Poisoned Boquet a True Story—Immortelles which Contain the Words: "Poor Charley, Gane to Glory," Placed on the Coffin.

After the formal examination of Guiteau's body by the physicians in attendance at the execution to ascertain that life was extinct, the autopy for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of his brain was immediately begun. The doctors lost no time in making their preparations, and even as early as two hours before the hanging had everything ready. The chapel was selected as the room that afforded the best light. They had their books spread out on the table, as also coplous drawings and diagrams of brains, shriftle, with here and there surgical instruments lying around. The coffin was placed upon a bench and the body was removed, and after having been stripped was laid upon a table. Scales and other appliances for examining the different parts of the hody were watched with the present of the hody was removed, and aster having been stripped was laid upon a table. Scales and other appliances for examining the different parts of the hody were placed about on the ables. The operations of the three surgeons engaged in the autopey were watched with the eyes the brain was removed and inspected. Then the body was cut open and a thorough examination made with the view of determining all the physiological facts that conid be of interest in connection with the case.

At 3-55 the autopey was adjourned, and Dr. Hartigan, who had the custody of the brain, took it to the Army Medical Museum on Tentin treet, where, in the room set apart for photographic purposes, a number of surgeons and physicana had assembled to continue the surjops.

street, where, in the room set apart for photographic purposes, a number of surgeons and physicans had assembled to continue the nutopey. Among those present were Drs. Nichols and McDonald, of New York, and Drs. Nichols and McDonald, of New York, and Drs. Lamb. Letring, Howers, Revburn. Ellot and Godding, of Washington. The direction of operations was by maximage consent given to Dr. Lamb. It had been the intention of the surgeons to begin by making a plaster cast of the brain, with a view to the permanent preservation in that form of its configuration and external characteristics, but the organ was found to be so soft and yielding as to render this impracticable. Resort was therefore had to photography. On account of the lateness of the hour, and a duit and overess tay, the preparations were necessarily nurried, but after placing the brain on a mass of curied hair, such as that used in upholstery, and disposing the in the forms which it had during life, a number of negatives were taken of it from various points of view, with more or less successful results.

The anatomical examination of the brain was then resumed. This examination, which will include a careful interceptical study of the tissues and structural characteristics of the organ, will certainly not be finished before this afternoon, and may occupy several days. The surgeons and physicians who are participating in the autopsy have pledged themselves not o make public in the meantine any individual conclusions of all the examinating physicians.

Dr. Hicks was met immediately after the conversation by a Currit reporter.

"The autopsy is proceeding nicely," he said, "and will be satisfactory to all parties."

"Where is the body?" asked the reporter, "It is still at the lail," replied the Doctor, "and will remain there on lee for some timor at least until the autopsy is mearly finished."

"Do you apprehend any attempt being made to get the body by those enterprising individuals who have offered from $5,000 to $100,000 for it?"

"I am not at all fearful on that score," he repitled. "It is in a safe place now, and you can rest assured no peripately crank shall get it. The body is mine, and I will make legal disposition of it."

From Mr. Hicks' tone it is pretty safe to infer.

Professor F. T. Miles, of this city, who was honored with an invitation to attend the autopsy of Guiteau's body at Washington yesterday, was called upon at his residence, No. 21 Continedral street, iast night by a Sin reporter. Professor Miles said that he was sorry to disappoint the expectations of the public but he really thought it useless for him to visit Washington yesterday on the invitation, because in his opinion the autopsy would be entirely superficial, and, he thought, unproductive of any real knowledge of the man's mental son cition while alive. Unless there was a gross defect in the brain the mere view would not disclose any data upon which the sanity or insanity of the man could be pased. To arrive faily and sattlefactority at the correct condition of the brain it will be precessary to place it in some preserving and hardening fluid which will prepare it for bandling and allow of a exercil and failabil measurement of the vacases its use.
